Endowed with an intelligence far superior to others of his race, be, in his extreme kindness to Colonel Long, seemed to disprove a wanton eruelty. A He exercises a magnetic influence over his people. Though ill, Colonel Long applied himself so to win the affections of Mtessi as to secure his consent to all his propositions;

"The country is described by Colonel Long as mountainous and picturesque, its soil i fertile and impregnated with Iron, the climate insalubrious and debilitating for Europeans. To convey an idea of the temperature, it may be said that the day is simply a combination of the variations of the three seasons-spring. summer, and autume. The morning is coo and pleasant till 8 or 9 o'clock, when the fearful rays of the sun are felt until 3 or 4 o'clock. when storm sets in, and continues during the night cold and chilly. The vegetable produstions are coffee, tobacco, sugarcane, Indian corn, and fruits, the banana being the principal food of the M Ugandi, from which also they distil a liquor called merissa. The animal kingdom consists of unimals common to all Africa-lions. elephants, &c. They manufacture from the burk of a tree the common costume of all the M'Ugandi. They also understand to prepare the skins of animals with wonderful perfection. The money of the country consists in rolls of copper and white shells. The King is absolute Origin doubtful, striking resemblance to the Gallas. Mtessi showed Colonel Long a white negro, with all the facial characteristics of the negro, both as to thick lips, &c., and white as to bia skip.

"Permission was accorded to Colonel Long to visit the Lake Victoria Nysuza and return by the Victoria Nile, the unknown Somerset of Speke. The latter was granted with great reluctance by Mtessi and met with every obstacle and opposition from his courtiers, and was only accorded at the last moment.

"On the 14th of July, having paid his fare well visit to Mtessi and bid adieu to the Court and Uganda, a three hours march down a beautiful road led him to the borders of Murchison Creek. Here a novel and beautiful spectacle presented itself. Mtessi had ordered bis whole fleet of 40 canoes, constructed of bark. of trees, like the causes of the American Indian. In each were seated 30 warriors. The next morning, accompanied by these, Colonel Long sailed down the Creek and out upon a beautiful lake, the waters of which are sweet and bright. The depth varied from 25 to 35 feet, its width seemed to be about from 12 to 15 miles. His intention to pass to the Ripon Falls was frustrated by their superstitious, fear of the guardian spirits there (Mtessi had a ready decapitated seven of these devils that Colonel Long might pass). Nothing could induce this mass of M'Ugandi to proceed. return after 36 hours was a necessity. Again he cocupied his buts near the Palace of Mtessi, and only on the 19th of July was able to proceed to Urondagany, distent three or four days' march. The obstacles that were made to his progress may be imagined when 20 days were consumed in the journey. All the miseries recounted by Speke were suffered in the manimum degree: arrived at Urondagany the promised boats were not be seen. Ool. Long, however, the second day seized two, and accompanied by his two soldiers Said and Abdel, two servants, and three children, with scanty provisions, the unvigation of the unknown and uncertain river was commenced. Horses and donkeys were to follow along the shore. From the 9th of August to the 11th constant rowing brought Colonel Long to a great basin, where the river lost itself to its immensity. It was certainly from 20 to 25 miles wide. Here, beset by furious storms and winds, without a compass, the way was lost. Forty-eight hours were consumed before the COMMERCIAL UNION ASSURANCE river was again found. The 16th, without recounting sufferings and hardships by the way. brought the Colonel opposite M'Rooli, where, fatigued and exhausted, he bivouncked for the night. On the 17th the Colonel wished to gain are prepared to GRANT POLICIES against the opposite shore, but was attacked (as pre- FIRE to the extent of £10,000 on Buildings, or quarto pages. concerted) by 400 men of Kaba-Ragas. THE ABSTAINER'S APPEAL Awake from your slumbers, Pricade, Pothers, and Brothers Aronse to the danger in front and in rear! Arise ere the breath of the Pestiloneo smothers The last spark of manhood, which yet may burn clear Your nearest and dearest before your eyes perish. The youthful and aged slike full a prey; And all that the True and the Good love to cherish, Is from our sad presence fast fleeting away.

Our alver-haired Grandeires, once reverend as honly, Now crowned with contempt are the objects of scorn Their years werse than lost, and their intellect's glory Lies drenched in the drink flood all farnished and ton The strength of our Young Men insidiously wasted; Our fair Maiden's modesty all thrown saids; Our Mothers with Motherhood's best feelings blasted; Our Children uenlected, polluted, destroyed.

These evils so hideous, what pen can depict them? What pencil could number the host of the slain? The Hall and the Hovel each furnish their victim, And no single homestead is free from the stain. To stay this destruction, we raise our white banner, We point through the gloom to its letters of gold; We stand for Humanity, Virtue, and Honour, We call for the help of the true and the bold.

The heartless and vicious with succes may assail us, And slander's vile venom may round as be thrown : The friends we rely, on may oftentimes fail us— May rank with our foes, or may coldly look on. Our arms in their weekness may tremble and falter, But heaven will strengthen and carry us through, The helpless, the homeless, the hopeless to shelter, The fallen to raise, and the lost to rescue.

Come round us ye powerful, nor let felse pride longer Prevent you from aiding the feeble and few: If you feel yourselves mighty, our claim is the stronger, Since if you don't need us, we sorely need you. Come round as ye weak—ye are friends in affliction, Our hands are extended to welcome and cheer? O never despair! here is help and protection! And God helds his children all equally dear!

Tis and some rejoice when our raw columns waver; "Tis sad some make sport when a frail comrade falls But the noble and god-like will bless the endeavour Which seeks the poor wanderer, and kindly recalls They swake to our call, which the true-hearted gathers; Arouse, for the danger more fearful becomes !-Arise to our help ! and the God of your fathers Will crown with his blessing your hopes and your homes;

A MAORI LOVE STORY. On the morning when the sun for last time illuminated an unconquered fortress upon the shores where it still loves to shine so brightly, Tui was seated in the house of her uncle Te Wira, finishing the border of a large shawl which she had commenced at the beginning of the siege. Her lover was beside her watching the progress of her active fingers, for he secretly hoped that his betrothed was engaged upon their wedding When the wild cries of alarm arose Makatu (the lover) rushed out to ascertain the Returning to the house he entreated Tui to fly, with him. No, friend. my heart, said she, 'alone your escape is certain; encumbered with me you will i overtaken. Fly, I beseech you, and save yourself.'-Resolutely the young man answered, 'I prefer death with you to life without you.'- Then, husband, be it so, said the girl, for the first time addressing him by the dearest of names. PLEASURES OF SMOKING. The pleasure of smoking is very complex, and consists of many elements, which we intend to consider one by one. The act of preparing to smoke opens the scene of a series of pleasures, with the easy and interesting occupation which is needed whether we make ready and light the oight or fill the pipe. Whose has watched a genuine and genial smoker in the act of making his preparations for his cherished delight, must admit that this moment is delicious. And it cannot be otherwise. forcemuch as the hone of enjoyment, and the satisfaction of preparing the enjoyment with our own hands and without fatigue, are elements which must produce a charming sensation-whenever, at least, the attention is in any considerable degree excited.

The second element which enters as a part into this pleasure which is so complex, is the sensation of taste, which in the pipe is limited to the relish of the smoke; whereto, however, is added, in the case of the cigar, the Insurances, such RETURN being payable on the sensation of the saliva wherewith the saluble parts of the leaves of the tobacco are imbibed. The infinite varieties of the pungent and the aromatic form a thousand combinations of pleasures, thoroughly known to consummate smokers alone. In general, however, in smoking, the gustatory and tactile nerves of the mouth are in a state of pleasant irritation.

of real organ, and man tastes without eating. The tactile sense of the line and of the unuscles contributes to the pleasure through the alternate and delicate movements which are necessary for inhaling the smoke, for retaining it artistically in the mouth, and then for exhaling i'.

Smell has a very great part in this pleasure but certainly less than the other elements. At all events, it is not indispensable; for a gontleman of Bergamo, whom I have already mentioned, is entirely destitute of smell, and almost destitute of taste, and yet he finds pleasure in smoking. The perfume of tobacco is usually inhaled by the nostrils, along with the smoke which issues from the nostril; but it can also pass from the mouth into the nose by means of the posterior nostrils. Those who know how to make the smoke issue in columns from the nose have, moreover, the pleasure of a slight irritation of the pituitary membrane, to which is joined the satisfaction of doing an odd and jesting thing. Sight pays its tribute to smokers, amusing them with the sportive aspects of slow combustion, and of the changes presented by the smoke which blends with the atmosphere. The proof that eight adds to the pleasure of smoking is, that very few find it agreeable to smoke in darkness, when nothing remains to the eye but the charm of watching the incandescent point of the tobacco which burns. The physiological effects of the nicotian and of the other volatile and odorous principles which are absorbed and which principally act on the nervous system have, however, a great influence on the pleasures of smoking, and contribute specially thereto by facilitating the digestion, and by bringing the general sensibility into a particular state of erethistic torpor -a process which may be carried so far as to be truly voluptuous. Novices in smoking are intoxicated, and suffer. Adepts are inebriated, and, unless they are very sensitive, they feel all over the surface of the skin a particular glow, a slight pruriginousness—both of them vory pleasant. The veterans of the art neither intoxicate nor inebriate themselves, but they feel comlove, I have ever loved you, even before the fortable expressing by this phrase the in-

She then calmly removed the questions which are every day agitated reshawl from its frame and threw it over both specting the true essence of the pleasure of their shoulders. Wrapped in it and one another's arms they left the house, taking sight. None of these senses is by itself the the path to the tapu grove, along which the difference in individuals which causes this or that sensation to be sought. The they slipped over the cliff, clasped in one element, however, which combines all pleasures into one pleasure - acting, so to speak, as coment—is the pleasure of doing something, of being diverted now and then from labour, and of interrupting idleness; precisely as has been said about the pleasure of souffing. Complete idleness is insupportable, even to the laziest; but labour wearies all, The royal priest was over forty when I first and is agreeable to few.
